Unilever products now available in Russia through Concern Kalina

Posted: 20 Oct 2011 08:34 AM PDT

On October 14, Unilever announced the purchase of 82 percent of the shares in Russia's Concern Kalina, greatly expanding the company's reach into one of the world's developing markets with a deal worth around $686 million.

CEO Paul Polman remarked to the press that the deal would "transform" the company's business in Russia with more Unilever products on the market.

The soda industry is "popping" in Russia!

In Coca-Cola's Q3 earnings call earlier this week, the company announced that "business in Russia outperformed the rest of the industry, gaining both sparkling and still beverage volume and value share in the process." This comment comes on the heels of opening of a new production facility in Rostov and the company's announcement that it's investing $3 billion over the next 5 years in Russia.

More information about Coca-Cola's investment in Russia can be found in today's Modern Russia post. Modern Russia is a forum run by Ketchum on behalf of the Russian Federation.
